We have just received and distributed internally the latest materials filed with the Federal Trade Commission by the tobacco companies in response to the Commission's request for comments on the original submissions of R. J. Reynolds, Philip Morris and Brown & Williamson. Lorillard agrees with us and Reynolds that Barclay fools the machine. Liggett holds to the position that no change in methodology should be made to take account of Barclay, and American is deferring any substantive comment.

Please note particularly the last paragraph of Matthew Myers's transmittal letter (copy attached) which seems to indicate that the Commission intends to move quickly to resolve this matter.

Naturally, if you wish to have the accompanying documents, I will be happy to provide them.

Alexander Holtzman
